Transport of Perishable Products

When transporting perishable products, it is necessary to evaluate the cargo, what its risks are and what type of monitoring should be carried out. In the case of refrigerated products, the cargo must be transported at an appropriate temperature, specific packaging is required, which can be a refrigerated container, depending on the nature of the shipment, and also special vehicles, which will guarantee the maintenance of refrigeration until the final destination.

Regarding precautions, in these cases, it is necessary to strictly control all stages of the chain to ensure that business partners are complying with the necessary requirements. The transport stage is normally considered the most vulnerable and subject to risks of the entire process, as it must be in synergy with the packaging, storage and preservation conditions of the goods.

Some companies choose to adopt road transport — as long as there are guarantees of compliance with standards. However, due to the urgency of delivery and the short life cycle of this type of cargo, the ideal is to opt for air transport, as it provides much shorter deadlines, in addition to, in many cases, reducing the amount of handling required until delivery. delivery to final destination.

CERTIFICATES

Important certifications in the logistics segment

In addition to our excellence in logistics, D-Log stands out for having internationally recognized certifications, which attest to our quality and commitment to the highest standards. Among the certifications we are proud to have are DUNS, IATA and OEA.

The DUNS seal is a global recognition of our financial strength, stability and transparency. It reinforces the trust that our customers place in us when they choose D-Log as their logistics partner.

IATA certification, in turn, demonstrates our expertise and compliance with international air transport regulations. This allows us to offer agile and safe solutions for the transport of air cargo, ensuring efficiency in our operations.

And last but not least, the AEO (Authorized Economic Operator) certification reinforces our customs security and compliance with legal requirements. This streamlines our operations and ensures the integrity of all business transactions involved.

At D-Log, our certifications are more than just achievements, they are a reflection of our commitment to offering reliable, high-quality logistics services. Count on us for all your logistical needs!

AEO Certification

The D-LOG is an Authorized Economic Operator - AEO.

The AEO Certification is provided by the World Customs Organization (WCO) and the Brazilian Federal Revenue, aiming to facilitate trade. The AEO ensures the connection between the government, the Federal Revenue, and the company committed to conducting import and export activities in a regular and reliable manner.

Once obtained, the AEO certifies the company as a low-risk, reliable operator, and consequently, it enjoys the benefits offered by the Brazilian Customs, related to greater speed and predictability of its shipments in international trade flows.

Furthermore, it also guarantees a series of benefits, such as participation in the Advisory Forum and in seminars and training sessions, the reduction of the percentage of inspection channels for export and import, among several others.

With the AEO Certificate, our clients benefit from advantages that generate speed, confidence, and security.
